Abstract

"The American foreign policy towards Iran and its impacts on the Gulf co-operation council states" (2001-2007)

Osamah al-tarawneh
Mu'tah university; 2007

This study aims at forming on obvious picture about the nature of the America foreign policy towards Iran from 2001 to 2007 through identifying the nature of the procedures of making this policy .particularly the one restricting the relation with Iran and objectives of the American foreign policy in the Gulf region.

This study discusses the American foreign policy towards Iran after the events of 11th September 2001 when Iran has been considered one of the evil states including north Korea and Iraq the American accusations of Iran as one of countries supporting terrorism continued although Iran condemned these events and supported the American war in Afagnistan.

This American policy towards Iran may lead to tremendous results on the Arab Gulf co-operation council states although the issue of terrorism in not included within the relations of the gulf states with Iran .however ,they fear that accusing Iran a terror action may cause a war in the region causing destructive impacts on the council states .

The Iraqi issue after the American invasion in 2003 has caused dangerous impacts on the council of the Arab Gulf states , opening a large chance for the Iranian role in the Gulf region and what this role represents a threat at the security of the council.

The Iranian nuclear issue causes the fears of the council states because the Iranian possession of nuclear technology may lead to convert the power equation in the gulf region, and may put the Gulf states under the Iranian obligations,

Finally, this study has concluded a number of results which show the impacts of the American foreign policy towards Iran on the council of the Arab Gulf states. moreover it suggests some particular recommendation to evade these impacts.
